POOR SHOWING FOR THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT.

It is Last in Rank in Proportion of Children to Get Common School Education.

That the state of Connecticut ranks last among the New England states in the proportion of her children who receive a common school education, that Hartford and Middletown are tied for fourth place among the Connecticut cities in this respect, were some of the interesting statements made at the meeting of the Connecticut State Teachers' association by Dr. Leonard P. Ayres of New York city.

Dr. Ayres is associate director of the department of child hygiene of the Russell Sage foundation, and former general superintendent of schools for Porto Rico. He is in charge of the educational research of the foundation and for the last three years has been conducting investigations of the backward children problem.

"The study of the backward pupils in the elementary schools of New England," Dr. Ayres said, "has shown that 72 per cent. of the pupils who enter school in Maine continue through the eighth grade; in Massachusetts 70 per cent. are carried through the elementary schools; while Vermont comes next with 67 per cent. New Hampshire 65 per cent., Rhode Island 51 and Connecticut comes last with over half of the children who enter the schools leaving before they reach the eighth grade. In Connecticut only 49 per cent. of the entering pupils in the elementary schools complete the course."

"By common agreement," continued Dr. Ayres, "law makers and publicists have come to hold that the education furnished by our common school course is the minimum which may safely be allowed the future citizens of this democracy. When, then, we discover that half of our children are not receiving this amount of education, the problem presented is a grave one."

"Let us consider what this really means. To the state this means that the men and women who must soon take the burden of citizenship are woefully ill-prepared. Think for a moment of the studies which the pupil who drops out of the fifth grade fails to receive. He has had no formal grammar of his own language; he has had no study of civics; his knowledge of the history of his own country is limited to stories about some of its great men. The subjects which we desire that half of our children are not receiving this amount of education, the problem presented is a grave one."

"During the past two years there have been conducted several laborious and costly investigations to discover why we have so many backward children in our schools and what the remedy is. Among the causes which these investigations have brought to light may be mentioned the compulsory attendance law, which provides that a child shall attend school for seven years—from the ages of 7 to 14—whereas our school courses are designed to last only five years. Another cause is the fact that our courses of study have unconsciously been fitted to the needs of the bright rather than the average child. This is proved by the fact that in the country as a whole children who are making rapid progress in school are ten times as numerous as those who are making slow progress. The course of study does not fit the average child."

Another cause is the irregular attendance, and here the parents are more responsible than the schools. In few American cities are as many as three-fourths of the school children actually present in school as much as three-fourths of the time. Another cause is the fact that our school courses are
